

Gediminas G. Akstinas

I used to be late almost every day for the first class of the morning at primary school because my parents' house was on the outskirts of the city. Every day I had to prepare for a sleepy, one-and-a-half-hour bus ride.

One year I had physics as the first lesson of the day, twice per week at 8:30 am. Our teacher, Kanapeckas, was a big old guy, and his signature sentence, which he often repeated at the beginning of a lesson, was, 'Look through that window! Do you see the mosquito on the windowsill of the building opposite? It's tapping with its right leg. This is physics!' One morning I was late to his class. I arrived just after he had finished his definition of the subject of physics. He stopped me as I entered the classroom.

'Where are you coming from?' he asked.

'Sorry, I'm late. I came from my home.'

'You're a liar! You came from the hallway into this class.'

Mid-Manhattan Library

"Mid-Manhattan Library" is a piece by Gediminas G. Akstinas. A growing selection of works extends and supplements the concept as well as the architecture of the Mid-Manhattan library, a branch of the public library located on fifth avenue, New York.

Holders keeping the door of the Museum of Contemporary Art of Calasetta open for one more working day

SHIP
KUNSTVEREIN
GEDIMINAS AKSTINAS

09/05/2015 - 09/06/2015 9am-9am

Kunstverein (Gerard Doustraat 132, Amsterdam)

The design has been provided by Sonny Falafel (Hestraat 43, Amsterdam)

A wooden box on the window